Season-long story arc (Season 2, Episode 1) . Dec 23, 2019 "Ready or not, here I come" - Harvey Keitel in The.Q: TPL with Parallel.For Is it really safe to use TPL in this way: foreach (var item in items.Where(...)) { Task.Factory.StartNew(() => { System.Threading.Thread.Sleep(1000); Console.WriteLine("Ending..."); }); } If item is enumerable then it may yield more than one item at a time. Now imagine I have 300 items. Will it overload the thread pool or will the overload the OS? If it overloads the thread pool I may have some deadlocks. I could simply use blocking collections like ConcurrentBag. But this is not ideal. A: Like most non-OS components, TPL is not thread-safe by default. The thread pool is a managed thread-safe component, but the TPL was never designed to be, and is not often used for concurrency in practice. In your case, the work performed by the anonymous delegate is not the bottleneck: you'll be blocking on the Thread.Sleep(1000). The fact that your items is an IEnumerable is orthogonal to the issue of thread-safety. If your items collection contains hundreds of thousands of elements, and the delegate requires the slightest bit of CPU time, then you'll have contention issues. You have a couple of options, aside from using the TPL explicitly. You can run concurrent foreach loops over your items - but you'll need to ensure that you don't use an outer loop indexing over some subpart of your enumerable. (This is a common pitfall.) You can convert your items to a List first. This is a blocking collection, and any other
