How to enable "do not disturb" mode in Windows 10 Windows 10 has an additional component called "Do Not Disturb Mode." It includes the ability to manage all notifications. Anything you receive by email, text message or any other type of notifications (SMS, WhatsApp) will not bother you. This is very handy when you are busy or want to work. However, the Do Not Disturb mode is a bit cut down, and it does not allow you to access all the features that the other modes have (for example, in the Do Not Disturb mode, you can set the time at which you want the notifications to be turned off). In some cases, you may want to skip these notifications. To do this, you will need to disable the notification in the settings and then double-click the notification. First you will need to go to Settings, then Sounds and Notifications and select Notification Settings and then Off. This also works on Android Oreo devices, but it might not be the easiest feature. After all, your smartphone probably won't work in "Silent" mode if it's activated (for example, if it's on when you're listening to music).
