I make some comment about the video I got this email..Assessing the Importance of Excess Cancer Mortality in Rapidly Expanding Populations: Evidence from a Latin American Birth Cohort. It is well known that increasing life expectancy increases mortality due to all-cause natural causes. These causes include the leading causes of noncommunicable diseases, such as cancer. Cancer is the leading cause of mortality in Latin America and the Caribbean, and has contributed to the expansion of the region's population. We assessed the effects of life expectancy on the number of cancer deaths, in particular, breast cancer. This is the first study to use a time-varying factor-exposed design to analyze the effect of life expectancy on breast cancer mortality among adults in Bogotá, Colombia, 1986-2001. We used data from the Colombian INEP Cohort study and linked individual data by birth date and cohort year. We employed a dynamic hazard model to adjust for age and other sociodemographic variables using demographic and socioeconomic information. In the time-varying factor-exposed design, 1 year of life expectancy increase corresponded to 1.4-6.8 (95% confidence interval) additional years of observed mortality among women, depending on the length of follow-up. The excess cancer mortality from age 50 years to 75 years of follow-up was highest during the most recent cohort years. In the past decade, the Colombian population has seen a 7% increase in life expectancy at birth; during this same period, breast cancer mortality increased by 32%. The current study highlights the importance of cancer mortality, not only in terms of numbers but also years of life lost due to increased mortality from cancer. It is recommended that the health sector in Latin America/Caribbean consider the reduction in life f30f4ceada
