SALT LAKE CITY — A new U.S. law that, in some ways, appears to be somewhat similar to Utah's new concealed-carry law took effect on Saturday. Some details of the new law will only apply to certain states, while in others, including Utah, a new, stiffer penalty awaits those who violate the law. The Violence Against Women Act of 1994, which took effect in 1994, requires gun dealers to sell firearms to anyone who has not been convicted of a felony or domestic violence. "The short answer is yes, I think there is," said Lucy McBath, the mother of Trayvon Martin, who was shot and killed in 2012 by George Zimmerman. McBath was an outspoken supporter of a new Florida law that makes it legal to carry a gun without a permit. While she didn't like the new law, McBath said she's glad it's a federal law because states can't opt out. She said that includes Utah, which has rejected concealed-carry permit legislation for years, and that it's "probably the reason I'm sitting here talking to you." Under the new federal law, states like Utah, that don't have specific laws allowing concealed carry, cannot choose to ban guns, but they can choose not to honor state permits from states that do allow it. But gun sellers are only required to sell to anyone who has a permit, and that includes those who have not been convicted of a felony or domestic violence. Some states offer discounts for buyers with clean criminal records. Proposed House and Senate legislation would require gun sellers to do more to verify the identity of buyers who lack a permit, McBath said. "We also hope that there
