Tickborne and other zoonoses in rural Nigeria. Health care in Nigeria has been provided traditionally by a system of village or district medicine.

There has been a revival in interest in allopathic medicine and its practice in the Nigerian rural areas in recent years. Nevertheless, the 'place of the village' remains important in the health of the people. All persons at risk of tick-borne and other zoonotic diseases should be educated about ways to reduce their risk. Medicine should be an integral part of health care, and clinical medicine should be closely integrated with public health. `import { NgModule } from '@angular/core'; import { BrowserModule } from '@angular/platform-browser'; import { NgxSpinnerService } from './spinner.service'; import { FormsModule } from '@angular/forms'; @NgModule({ imports: [BrowserModule, FormsModule], declarations: [], providers: [NgxSpinnerService], bootstrap: [AppComponent] }) export class AppModule { }` With the increased usage of digital communication links for data transfer in systems such as router networks and the like, a need has arisen for an Ethernet driver for communicating with digital signal processors and other peripheral devices on a network. One system for implementing such a driver is described in the
