This provides multiple advantages. In particular the important feature of triple speed printing is not available in laser or inkjet printers, which in effect are double (or single) speed printers. And of course, one needs to pay extra for the print speed. This is all now done by this printer. Of course, however, the cartridges and the print head need to be washed every so often. Every other print job is of course done with the inkjet printers, which can be completely ink free and very reliable when used properly. The mentioned functionality has been available on previous models, but was now made more robust and provided with a more attractive print style. In fact, the paper is also supplied separately, and one will have a better idea of the quality of the (dry) paper. There is a choice between 150 g/m, 250 g/m, and 500 g/m at 2000 dpi; all are high quality papers. It is stated that the 300 g/m paper has not been introduced yet. The paper has a matte finish, which is an improvement over the glossy finish on previous models. Also, the ink has a much lower viscosity (around 20-50 cP instead of around 200 cP), resulting in much better ink absorption and less smudging in the print head. To avoid clogging of the ink supply port, the paper is positioned inside the printer before the printing process, not after. The ink filling tubes are positioned closer to the print head, and is optimised to reduce the risk of build up in this area. The print head is rather good, but it is a bit hard to install. Each print head cartridge is held in place with two click functions and two locking clips. The main reason for this is to prevent the removal of the print head from the receiving position. A certain amount of force is required to install the print head, and the installation is only possible from one side of the machine. The installation of the ink cartridges can be done easily from either side, but the removal is a bit difficult. It is recommended to wait for the ink to dry before removing the ink cartridges. Apart from the functionality mentioned above, there is another interesting improvement. Instead of the inks ending up in the printing areas, they now end up in the lid that closes the ink refills. The lid is designed in such a way that one can either take the lid off and refill the ink manually, or use the built in ink refills for when one
