This information can be used against you and harmed your privacy. The cookies that do not belong to you might be linked to third-party services. The cookies are used for collecting, analyzing and storing some of your personal information in order to enrich your browsing experience. The information that is stored may include your IP address, the timestamp, your browser type, your device, your access frequency and your system name. The cookies set by an ad provider might be signed with a unique identifier so that they can be associated with a specific user. The ad provider may use this information to enhance the ad experience and target the advertising content. The most common circumstances in which this cookie is used is the registration procedure for an online game or the shopping cart process.

User-based and Third-party Tracking Cookies

Some cookies are set by a specific third-party service and may be received by a user without his/her knowledge. As an example, the cookies can be included in the notification messages from social media sites like Facebook. These cookies can be used to remember your login information, present a message when a specific link is shared or to provide you with the possibility of a more efficient browsing experience, such as delivering personalized content. These third-party cookies are usually invisible and they sometimes present a security risk for your privacy and the collection of personal information. In order to verify the origin of these cookies, you may use the extensions included in your browser.

How to protect your privacy and prevent tracking?

Make sure the extensions and the software you use for your online activities allows you to delete or turn off the tracking cookies you do not want. The user should be able to view, delete or turn off the tracking cookies listed below. The user can generally access the location of this information by clicking on the word 'Cookies' on top right of the browser menu bar. There are, however, some cases where these extensions may not work (for example, when cookies are blocked using the recommended settings on your computer.)

Protecting your privacy on the web: Cookie Stumbler Basic is a reliable and intuitive browser addon. However, it could benefit from a function that automates the cookie clean-up. You can run an intuitive personal protection software program on your computer. This is a simple program that allows you to look for the cookies that websites are saving on your PC. Then, you could erase all of them, except for the ones that you do not want to erase. Moreover, if you want, you could also configure two lists: the Keeplist and the Blacklist. The Keeplist includes the domains you cookie-using domains that you never want to erase, while the opposite collection hosts domains that you do not wish to send information to. There are two more free tools for protecting your privacy on the web: The first one, called Cookie Blocker, automatically blocks and hides cookies that are detected by it. You might also use the two other free tools, which is an intuitive browser addon as well as a personal protection software program. The users of the web pages may collect information about the visitors, such as IP addresses, domain names, the type of browser and operating system. It seems like such information is not actually used for advertising purposes. Instead, all the information is placed in a file, and the visitors' IP address is removed. Cookie Stumbler Basic is a great tool to use if you want to erase all the cookies saved by the sites you visit.
