Radiotelephony for Pilotsâ€” by F. A. Robertson. Robertson described the radiotelephone as "transmitting and receiving" within wireless data communications. It was used as a cordless telephone during World War II and after. After the introduction of telephone networks in the 1950s, transmission systems were taken over and telephone networks were introduced. The aircraft's radio contact with the ground station was terminated and the transmitters were removed. When, in the 1970s, telephone systems were introduced, these radiotelephone systems were converted to radiotelephone systems.
