Enjoy your Windows Themes!For the past 20 years, the number of food stamp recipients has grown faster than ever before. However, despite this rapid increase, the number of Americans living in poverty has stayed relatively constant at 15%. Why are the results such a mystery? After President Obama gave the annual State of the Union address, a big research paper about the growth of government was leaked, apparently in an effort to embarrass Obama. The paper showed that government agencies had responded to the recession by spending more. In a way, the paper was correct in that large government agencies were spending more money, but it completely missed the point. When I worked at the U.S. Office of Personnel Management, I worked with a federal agency for the disabled. This agency had a budget of about $1.2 billion. The agency ran information and training workshops for private industry and provided services to about 100,000 people. It's part of the Federal Emergency Management Agency's job to respond to disasters. But the agency's budget is so small, its infrastructure so limited, that many people believe it's not necessary.
