Hamlet (1913 film)

The Rites of Hamlet, also known as Hamlet, is a 1913 silent drama film directed by Herbert M. Freeman (Hamlet) (1913), based on Shakespeare's tragedy of the same name, which portrays the title character as a weak and indecisive monarch. It is the fifth film of the German-Austrian filmmaking company Ufa (1912-1914). In the film, the entire drama is played on a stage that makes an attempt to be as authentic as possible. Films of this kind were already part of the folklore of the cinema theatre Austria had previously made the Dracula, The Golem, Dr. Mabuse and The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari, among others, as well as the first sound film, The Black Man (1913). Movie makers in Germany, England and America were first confronted with the problem of the lack of specialist actors who could speak with a foreign accent. This was at the same time and the result of the turmoil in Europe during the year leading up to the First World War.
