It's part of Revit that I am using, and that is under the company I work at. You can see from the .Net error message that it's an API hook and I can't seem to get past it. The project is already a .net 4.5.1 library and the other external projects are all the same. A: Turns out that Revit is looking for a COM reference to Runtime Version 2.0.0.0 so I copied the reference and all is good now. Q: Tensorflow using first 500 elements of each row The following code iterates through the 500 images in a directory and sorts them by class. The pictures are stored in the following order: class 1 - [23, 42, 64, 1, 13, 21,..., 37] class 2 - [14, 15, 23, 24, 40,..., 52] The number of pictures per class is always 500. The following code sorts the images and outputs a single sorted image. I am trying to output only the first 500 elements of each image. My output is a vector of images where the first element is a vector of images from class 1 and the second element is a vector of images from class 2. For the first 50 elements of each vector, it's almost correct. The elements are shuffled and broken up into a vector of 500 images where each image is from one class (class 1 or class 2).

images= [] for dirpath, dirnames, filenames in os.walk(path): for filename in sorted(filenames): image = skimage.io.imread(os.path.join(dirpath, filename)) print(image.shape) images.append(image) images = tf.convert_to_tensor(images) images_top = images[500:] images_bottom = images[:500] images_top = tf.image.convert_image_dtype(images_top, dtype=tf.uint8) images_bottom = tf.image.convert_image_dtype(images_bottom, dtype=tf.uint8) with tf
