A: I've found this one very useful: It is based on a fork of }$ are dependent on the transverse momentum between the blobs, Δ_{z0} and Δ_{z3} are independent of the transverse momentum. Δ_{z3} is equal to zero when the separation between the blobs is zero. Similar to the case of one-blob mesons, we again find that the transverse momentum of all the three decay products are quite small. It is interesting to notice that the difference between the solid line (in Fig. [pid-p-z] (a)) which shows the mass spectrum of the process from the two-blobs formation to the decay of the latter into two light mesons (or two baryons) and the dotted line (in Fig. [pid-p-z] (b)) which gives the mass spectrum of the decay of the one-blob meson into the two light mesons, is quite small. The two blue lines in Fig. [pid-p-z] (b) show the difference between the dotted line and the dashed lines, which is again rather small. This once again shows that the two-blobs meson decays into two light mesons via the process we discussed in the previous section, where the two mesons stay very close together. The decay of the one-blob meson into the two
