Do it manually, or use dk-build. Determination of trace elements in prion protein by flame atomic absorption spectrometry. Prion diseases are a group of progressive fatal neurodegenerative disorders that occur in both humans and animals. The causes of human prion diseases are not yet fully understood, but exposure to prions in the form of food, saliva, or other environmental sources is often suspected to be an etiological factor. To estimate the risks of infection from animal sources, it is important to understand the natural body levels of prions and trace elements, which may be involved in their toxicity. Element contents in tissues of different natural PrP genotypes, including PrP(C) knockout,
