(Japanese folk tale) There once lived a woman, and she had three daughters. The eldest was the cleverest, the middle one the most beautiful, and the youngest the silliest. When she died, she left her daughters a legacy of one hundred thousand yen. The eldest took care of them, the middle one took care of her husband, and the youngest, not to live alone, took an old man as her husband. They lived poorly, and her body was sore from her work. She went one morning to the sea and walked along the shore. And when she reached the cliff, she saw a little fish in the water. The fish was shining in the sunlight like a little sun. And then the girl said to the fish: - You're just like the sun. And I want to catch you! - But I'll catch you, too! - replied the fish in the voice of a little girl with pigtails. She swam very close to the fish, and the fish began to jump out of the water into the little girl's palm. She began to jump and said: - I am a little girl with pigtails, I live in the sea. I have a fish. - And I am your neighbor," said the girl with pigtails. - And I have a fish, too. - And I have a cat, - said another girl. - And I have a parrot, - said the third. - And I have a hamster, - said the fourth. - And I have a parrot, - said the fifth girl. - And we have a parrot, - they said together. - And I'm your neighbor," said the sixth. - And me. - And I'm your neighbor," said the seventh girl. - And me," said the eighth girl. - And we have a parrot. - And we have a parrot, - they said together. - And we have a cat. - they said together. - And we have a mouse, they said together. - And we have a cat. - And we have a mouse. - And we have a cat," they said together. - And we've got the cat," they said together. And then, together, "And we've got a cat," they said. And they didn't say anything together. And it was - when they started talking one - one - one - one. And then it got good - and then it got good - and then it got good. He said they were having a good time. She didn't need to understand, he wasn't talking to understand, he just needed to talk, and he talked. And she listened, and she felt good. He talked about them, what they were good at. And then about him. When he died. - Was he human?! - He was. - Was he a man?! - Yes. - And a man can be a man, can't he? - Can a man be a man, yes? - And it can be that a man can be
