1. Traffic lights: The traffic light is a circular device that informs people of a red or green light. It works by using lights in different shapes, usually a red light facing up and a green light facing down. When a car detects the red light, it will need to stop before going into the intersection and the driver can go on if the green light is on.

2. Road Maps: A map can be used to see a map of a city or country. The map consists of a grid of colored squares called blocks, which are the smallest division of land. The blocks are then divided into much smaller sections called towns and cities, states, countries and continents. 3. Tunnels: Tunnels are a complex and expensive underground system of roads, tunnels, tubes, canals and networks that have been used to provide a subterranean transportation system. They are sometimes called underground networks or subterranean systems. They are the system of roads and tunnels that connect one place to another, usually beneath a city or town. 4. Transparent Road Icons: The transparent road icons are meant to be used on navigational interfaces like road maps or online game interfaces. In game interfaces, for example, they are used to represent roads or other routes that a player may follow while playing. A: I've made a free set of 533

The systemic inflammatory response to infection is characterized by a rapid induction of pro-inflammatory cytokines and an overproduction of anti-inflammatory cytokines. This response is likely mediated in part by autocrine cytokine signaling. To test this hypothesis, we determined the plasma levels of IL-1beta, IL-6, IL-8, IL-10, and TNF-alpha in a heterogeneous group of patients who received a diagnosis of sepsis and who were monitored at 6 time points during the course of their illness. Our findings indicate that IL-6 and TNF-alpha (as well as to a lesser extent IL-8) were significantly higher in patient samples than controls in the early stages of infection (days 0-3). Elevated IL-1beta levels did not coincide with peak IL-6 and
