A set of icon representing a flat - like a tile and carpet on a floor. What is new in this release: New icons from Adobe Stock and Shutterstock. The blood-brain barrier (BBB) serves as a dynamic metabolic barrier in the CNS that prevents harmful chemical metabolites and xenobiotics from entering the brain, while allowing essential nutrients and essential neurotransmitters to pass through. However, in pathological states such as traumatic brain injury (TBI) or metabolic conditions such as elevated homocysteine levels, the BBB is no longer able to perform this crucial role.

As a consequence, neuronal damage ensues, leading to the development of neurodegenerative diseases such as TBI, Alzheimer's, and Parkinson's disease. TBI is a major cause of death and disability, occurring at rates of 70-500 per 100,000 people annually in the United States. To date, there are no therapies available to treat the neurological consequences of TBI, with the exception of the use of steroids. Because steroids are typically not efficacious for the treatment of TBI, we need to look to new approaches that will provide effective treatment in the short and long term. We have previously demonstrated that the protein La is able to penetrate the BBB and reach the brain. Importantly, we also demonstrated that the presence of La in the brain can inhibit the opening of the BBB following TBI in mice, resulting in protection of the brain. Because of these promising results, we now have a unique opportunity to translate these findings to the clinic, where we propose to utilize La-based therapeutics to treat TBI. Specifically, we propose to use the La protein as a carrier for the delivery of the neurotrophic factor, glial cell line-derived neurotrophic factor (GDNF) into the brain, to treat TBI in a mouse model. The research design is set out to address the following aims: (1) Identify the most effective expression vector(s) for La-based GDNF delivery, and (2) Determine if GDNF delivery with La-based vectors is an effective therapeutic for the treatment of TBI in the mouse. Upon completion of this project, we will have generated data indicating the potential of La-based GDNF delivery as a novel therapeutic strategy for TBI in the mouse. We anticipate that this strategy will provide a foundation for the development of novel therapeutics for the treatment of TBI in humans. Denis Hayes Denis Hayes may refer to: Den
