"I took two weeks off in London," she said of her approach. "The producers were so supportive. There was never any pressure to do this, and they knew the script was solid. It's just a matter of getting it done." View photos Smith and Portman are cousins, and Smith added that Portman was a huge supporter of their project: "She said yes a million times before we even started. She was really excited about it. And I'm excited about the story of a female figure out on her own and fighting her way." The movie is a biopic focusing on the life of Ingrid Bergman, and Portman's character is a Danish immigrant to the United States who falls in love with a man who works on Wall Street in the 1930s. "I wasn't going to do a music biopic," Smith said, citing that her own first thoughts on the project were that it sounded too broad for her. "I was in no rush. I didn't really think about what or who I wanted to play. I wasn't making a movie about two artists. It's an interesting idea, and after some time I thought, 'well, this isn't so terrible. I like this lady, and maybe I can find a way to do it right.' It's so specific, this story, because it's the real story." In that way, Smith pointed out, there will be no necessary connection to Smith's own Ingrid Bergman
